NORTH CAROLINA STRONG DRY STATE

Politicians Expect at Least 80 Counties May Go Republican

GREENSBORO, N. C.—This Piedmont region of North Carolina, which includes the thriving cities of Raisigh, Winston-Salem, Durham, Salisbury, Greensboro and Charlotte, impresses one as being the industrial center of the new South. You travel about it, not by train, but by swift and comfortable motorbuses, over perhaps the best system of hard-surfaced state roads in the world. Hard roads were forced upon North Carolina, for there is nothing world. Hard roads were forced upon North Carolina, for there is nothing at once more slippery and more sticky than the red clay of its soil once it is wet. But with a 4-cent gasoline tax and a state road department administered with zeal and efficiency by a brother of the late Ambassador Walter Hines Page, the State has constructed a system of highways second to none. The towns I have mentioned are all within two or three hours' run of each other. or three hours' run of each other, and hourly buses at cheap fares must be giving the railroad managers something to think about.

There are in this State no less than 30 counties which politicians say will inevitably go Republican in the event of the Smith nomination. At least three congressional districts are in the same classification. The latter consideration may explain the fact, noted in a local paper, that no North Carolina Congressman is for Smith, while several are openly and avowedly opposed to him. In honor of the same occasion an amnesty was proclaimed for certain political offenders and military prisoners with sentences not exceeding five years. Among those benefiting were many deserters from the war including Prince Windischgratz and the Police President, Nadossy, and many Social-Democratic parliamentarians and journalists.

Vault Under Washington Streets Once Used for Water Supply

SPECIAL PROM MONITOR BURBAY WASHINGTON—Workmen of the District of Columbia Water Department have discovered an unexpected subterranean vault which is believed to be the last link with the time when the White House got its water from springs in nearby Franklin Park. The arched vault is of ma-sonry and brick and the chamber runs 30 feet under the street and is about 15 feet wide and 10 feet deep. The White House water supply has fluctuated with the times. Until near the close of Andrew Jackson's first term two pumps, located in the yard, were the sole source of water. The fire of 1814 almost exhausted of improved supply.

Back in 1819 Congress appropriated money to pipe water from springs in the Franklin Square reservoirs close to the White House, but property owners of those days demanded exorbitant prices and the matter fell through. In 1832 Congress passed a new measure and water was piped for the first time to the Executive Mansion.

LOBBY BILL PUT UP TO HOUSE FOR

Senate Quickly Adopts Measure to Regulate Leg-

Islative Agents

Second From Montron-Busine
WASHINGTON — The bill sponsored by Thaddeus H. Caraway (D.),
Senator from Arkshasa, for the regulation of lobbying, which has been adopted by the Senate after brief but snappy debate, and without a dissenting vote, is now before the House for concurrence.

This marks the first definite move against the growing power of lobby ists in Washington in more than a decade. There have been intermittent outbursts in that period, but all of them ended in words, until the operation of the so-called waterpower lobby, which was characterised by conservative senators as "the greatest in the history of Washington," and powerful enough, it is asserted, to prevent a senatorial investigation of the water-power industry. This investigation was approved by the Senate Interestate Commerce Committee and was generally considered as certain to be ordered.

The bill requires all lobbyists, in the bill requires all lobbyists, in the bill requires all lobbyists, in industry. This investigation was approved by the Senste Intersate Commerce Committee and was generally considered as certain to be ordered.

The bill requires all lobbyists, in the most inclusive sense of the expression, to register with the clerks of the two branches of Congress, complete information concerning their employment, how much they receive, and under what terms and conditions, who they represent, and what they are interested in. Those who fail to register and give the required information are subject to fines and imprisonment ranging from $100 to $1000 and from one month to one year for each offense. Falsification of registered information makes the offender guilty of perjury and subject to the full penalty of the law.

The bill defines lobbying as follows:

"Lobbying shall consist of any effort to influence the action of Congress upon any matter coming before it, whether it be by distributing literature, appearing before committees of Congress, or interviewing or seeking to interview individual members of either the House of Representatives or the Senate."

As the measure was about to be acted upon William Cabell Bruce (D.), Senator from Maryland, observed that the project would not the project would

United States Quota Law Is Said to Adversely Affect Canada

Conservative Member Complains in the House of Commons That Many Native-Born Are Crossing the Border

OTTAWA — The result of the United States quota law on the prospects of the Dominion was the only matter dealt with by W. E. Tummon, Conservative member for South Hastings, in his budget speech. He took exception to a remark of J. S. Robb, Minister of Finance, that Canadians were returning home and the country was building solidly for the future.

On account not only of the Dominion's juxtaposition to an immensely prosperous country but also of the immigration laws of that country which harred all foreigners excepting only Canadians and Mexicans from entering in large numbers, "a condition has been created which we cannot afford to overlook, as it constitutes one of the most serious problems with which we have country which harred all foreigners excepting only Canadians and Mexicans from entering in large numbers, "a condition has been created which we cannot afford to overlook, as it constitutes one of the most serious problems with which we have to contend."

The doors of the United States being closed to all but native-born Canadians meant the loss to Canada of that very class of citizen which it was essential to retain. While he admitted that the time might never come when there would not be comings, and goings between the two countries. Mr. Tummon said he thought that the losses in recent years were out of all proportions to the gains. During the last three years 125,974 Canadian-born, 13,951 British subjects, who had acquired Canadian domicile before leaving Canada, and 8064 naturalized Canadian citizens had returned from the United States.

THE week's best question has come anonymously to hand. It is this:

If some persons are jailed for talking peace in time of war, why shouldn't others be jailed for talking war is time of peace? In other words, is the pacifist any more of a menace to the success of a war than the jingoist is to the stability of peace?

THILE some are talking of war or apprehending it, the will to HILE some are talking of war or apprehending it, the will to peace is expressing itself through many channels. More recently. Frank B. Kellogg, United States Secretary of State, has reopened conversations with M. Briand, the French Foreign Minister, looking toward the outlawry of all war—a treaty which Mr. Kellogg would present to all nations for signature.

Although France has reiterated that it could not commit itself to a multilateral treaty against all war because of alliances requiring it to aid certain smaller European nations in event of attack, Mr. Kellogg is trying to persuade M. Briand that the proposed antiwar treaty can be made sufficiently inclusive to make such wars in support of another nation unnecessary.

THE relative size of a nation's navy may be a matter for the admirals and their technicians to decide. Whether or not the country will accept their conclusions as to naval needs is another question. The temper of public opinion in the United States has shown itself to be against any immediate, substantial increase of sea armaments. The original program calling for 25 cruisers, 32 submarines, 9 destroyer leaders, and 5 aircraft carriers has been cut to 15 cruisers and 1 aircraft carrier. The proposed expenditure has rier. The proposed expenditure has been decreased nearly $500,000,000. The announcement of this downward revision of the naval bill has been happily received in Great Britain. It does not, however, minimise the need of an agreement among the principal powers to limit naval construction. While it is freely conceded that naval equality should prevail between the United States and Great Britain, the Geneva Naval Conference indicated that the United States would find it necessary to half to particular the context to limit construction.

d to parity if a treaty to limit construction is not reached.

The Naval Limitation Conference of 1931 will offer an opportunity to develop such an agreement. To facilitate this end Senator Borah is pressing a measure before the United States Senate, calling for a pre-liminary conference to codify maritime law in time of war. That the British and American navies would ever be pitted against each other is unthinkable. That they might be used to render ineffectual each other's blockades is recognized. Therefore, Mr. Borah believes that to define the maritime commercial rights of neutrals in time of war would do much to eliminate the need of big navies.

NE aspect of naval reduction which is receiving renewed attention is the possibility of abolishing the submarine. Discussion in the British press this week reaffirmed England's willingness to join with the United States in outlawing undersea craft. France, not unnaturally, demurs, since it regards the submarine as its principal defensive naval weapon. The multilateral treaty banishing war, such as M. Briand and Secretary Kellogg are now considering, may quite likely prove to be the practical step preparatory to a general and actual disarmament.

VIDENTLY the Zinovieff letter is still enshrouded in mist. It was that letter which brought about the defeat of the British Labor Government in 1924. The letter, purported to be issued by the Third Internationale, urged the Communists to stir up the proletariat to secure ratification of the proposed treaty with the Soviet Government and cause disaffection in the army, navy and in munition works.

Labor characterises the letter as a capitalistic forgery, and demands a judicial investigation. Now is the demand confined to Labor. The Daily Express joins in the plea. Just what effect a clearing up of the atmosphere would have it is difficult to determine, but there is no doubt Labor has in view its election campaign in pressing vigorously an issue that had almost ceased to disturb the political life of the country.

THEN Commander Richard E. Byrd, Virginian by birth, New Englander by adoption, sails Sept. 10 to the antarctic, it will be for a twofold purpose. Primarily he hopes to unlock secrets of the natural sciences which have been locked in the ice of centuries. If an expedition to the South Pole is a great adventure, it is also, to Commander Byrd, a great challengs.

Plant and animal lifé, in forms not hitherto revealed, he believes exist there. Perhaps he hopes, too, to find an unknown race. The antarctic is geographically one of the greatest tracts of uninvestigated area in the it is undergoing crises of glacial Books have told what supposedly happens during periods of glacial change. Byrd wants to see if what the books have supposed is the truth. He, with his company of 54 men and 100 sled dogs, will sail in the wooden ice ship. Samson, for an anchorage in the Bay of Whales within the Ross Sea. Because the Samson was built in Norway in 1885 it is old, as sailing ships go. Dog sled travel is one of the oldest means of transportation known to man. Airplane travel is the newest and overcomes distances as the other two cannot.

Byrd is especially interested in problems of navigation as they exist in a region whose air is lighter than any air through which he has thus far flown. Beside the customary navigation instruments of an expeditionary flight he is taking others, especially devised, with which to record the atmospheric phenomena hitherto unknown.

"Not a flight to the South Pole primarily; not a 'dash' in the ordinary meaning of the term," Byrd says. "A scientific expedition carefully planned. And then, a great adventure."

RLOOD-CONTROL legislation is beginning to take tangible shape in Washington. Although a fully conceived project for the effective subduing of the Mississippi waters will not spring from the current session of Congress, steps for a practical beginning are most likely to be taken. Both houses have considered somewhat diverse measures. This week the Jones bill, compromising conflicting ideas, was placed before the Senate.

The principal provisions of the Jones bill authorize an appropriation of $325,000,000, require the Federal Government to meet the costs, and appoint a commission of seven engineers to administer the work. The bill assumes that the inundated states have already expended their share in past flood control facilities. President Coolidge has indicated that he would accept such a measure.

THE news of politics, which has so long commanded the lion's share of the cable dispatches, is giving way to news of another character. It is news of industry and important economic movements, intimately affecting many peoples, which is today easily rivaling politics as one of the foremost concerns of the world.

Europe's industrial renaissance is finding expression in England and in most of the conti-nental countries. Germany, France, Italy and Belgium, traversing slowly along the road to economic recovery—a road strewn with the obstacles of a destructive war—are all producing British industries give assurances that unemployment is being gradually—however slowly—absorbed, and that the direction of the economic trend is toward the better.

In both Great Britain and the United States significant projects are being undertaken in an effort to straighten the so-called business cycle into a straight line of prosperity. British employers and British employees are seeking to reconcile their interest, and to apply a policy of co-operation to the task of building industry which will yield both a reasonable wage and a reasonable profit, related factors that they are. In the United States a survey, sponsored by Herbert Hoover, is in progress to determine the underlying factors in prosperity so that these factors may be maintained and extended. The survey accentuates the reactor of strengthening the buying power of the public mostly by the need of strengthening the buying power of the public, mostly by means of higher wages and general employment, so that business may expand normally without traditional deflations.

OLITICALLY, Europe is not without its delicate problems at the Politically, Europe is not without its delicate problems at the moment. Although little incidents should not be focused out of their perspective of importance, lesser events, as the past has shown, do not infrequently hold far-reaching implications. For example, a few carloads of "agricultural implements" dumped on the Hungarian frontier, or a grievance against Italy voiced in the Austrian Parliament.

Such incidents disturb Europe's sincere attempt at tranquillity, particularly since these "agricultural implements," as they were labeled, turned out to be machine guns, and the grievance concerning Italy's treatment of the German minorities in southern Tyrol threatened to involve other powers. The machine guns came from Italy, and for one good reason or another were unclaimed. They were sold by the railroad officials as junk. And these are but a few of the complications. League influence is proving a stabilising factor.

This statement was made by Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, president of the university, in an address outlining the progress of women's education. He remarked that the periods of opposition and of trying to supply identical education with that of men's chools are past, and said he believes the women's colleges soon will be finer and more efficient than the men's colleges.

SANDINO COUP PREDICTED IF MARINES LEAVE 28

Secret Report on Nicaragua Is Revealed in Senate-Withdrawal Demanded

WASHINGTON (A) — Withdrawal of American Marines from Nicaragus, in the opinion of Brig.-Gen. Rufus H. Lane, adjutant and inspector of the corps, would be the signal for an immediate march on Managua and capture of the Government by Gen. Augustino Sandino, the man now sought by United States forces in an effort to restore order in the little Republic.

General Lane's opinion, given in secret to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee at a hearing on Nicaraguan conditions last month, was made public along with testimony by Curtis D. Wilbur, Secretary of the Navy, and others, by William E. Borah (R.), Senator from Idaho and chairman of the committee, after a sharp attack on the Administration's policy by C. C. Dill (D.), Senator from Washington.

In addition to making public this testimony, Mr. Borah said that none of the resolutions now before his committee proposing an inquiry into Nicaraguan conditions and American policy would be reported. He expressed doubt that Senate action would have any effect on the Administration's policy.

skirmish between Sandino and American forces in which five marines were slain and eight wounded. He demanded that the marines be withdrawn, declaring they were sent to Nicaragua at the request of American concessionists and that no Americans concessionists and that no Americans or their property were in danger. Samuel M. Shortridge (R.), Senator from California, disagreed on this point and favored a policy of protection for Americans everywhere. Walter E. Edge (R.), Senator from New Jersey, also defended the Administration attitude, declaring with drawal of the marines would violete.

drawal of the marines would violate a solemn agreement entered into between the United States and the two major factions in Nicaragua, the Conservatives and Liberals.

Details of the latest attack on the marines were received by the navy. Coming from Rear-Admiral David F. Sellers, commanding the special service squadron in Nicaraguan waters, the report said the attack took place about 8:15 p. m., Feb. 27, near Jocoto, that about 250 men made up the Sandino party, and that at least one machine gun was used against the marines.

The resolution declares that whereas, according to figures prepared by the American Federation of Labor, the percentage of employment of union labor in San Antonio, where there is a large percentage of

It is not so many years ago that a young high school boy was directing the orchestra in an Allentewn (Pa.) theater, Shortly afterward, in 1919, the became associated with the famous Negro comedian, Bert Williams. This young man was Don Voorhees, whose celebrated concert orchestra is a regular feature of the Columbia Broadcasting System's programs, and is heard regularly every Friday night at 10 o'clock, eastern standard time. It was Don Voorhees who conceived the idea of introducing a dance orchestra in a Broadway show, and the idea met with such instantaneous success, as did his directing of the orchestra, when he appeared in the "Vanities," that he became musical director of each subsequent edition of that show and won for his orchestra the distinction of having the record for the longest unbroken run on Broadway.

Mr. Caldwell's letter replied to David I. Walsh (D.), Senator from Massachusetts, asking information in view of New England protests on the "distribution" clause.

Mr. Caldwell said the amended bill before the House provided for equalising radio power and stations in the five zones. A rough estimate, he said, showed this arrangement would cut present Massachusetts power from 19.000 to 3750 watts and reduce its 1s stations to 8.

the effect of destroying stations in Massachusetts and throughout the North, East and West—stations that are serving the South in the absence of their own stations. As you are aware, the commission cannot order stations to be built unless applications are made. There have been few applications from the South since, as you realize, radio stations are costly. To erect a 5000-watt station costs about $150,000 and an equal sum is required for its operation each year.

LONDON—No one can realise, save those who have been behind the scenes in flying from its infancy, what strides are now being made in the design and construction of airplanes, airships, flying-boats and aero-engines.

When the historian of the future looks back upon the early days of aeronautics he will see at first nothing but vague gropings. Failures the use of a low-priced fuel, must be attained. Such has been the probwas one essential stage of the aerial conquest which it was impossible to lem, and it has taken years to solve it. But today aerial oil engines exist cautious employment close to the ground of light, simple craft, scienin their first tangible form—great, simple, rather gaunt-looking monsters. Externally they seem little different from crude-oil engines such as drive vessels upon the surface of the sea. But actually they are engi-

the sea. But actually they are engineering marvels.

By the use of metal alloys these air-oil-engines have been turned out now at such reduced weights, compared with any marine-type oil engine, that they are already well within the scope of aerial use. These new motors run on a crude oil costing only about 5d. a gallon as compared with aviation petrol at approximately is. 5d. a gallon. In their cylinders, specially lightened for aerial use, and yet at the same time immensely strong, air is compressed under such pressure that great heat is generated. Into this heated air a jet of the heavy oil is injected. It vaporines and ignites, and the consequent explosions drive the engine. The motor dispenses with carburetor, sparking plugs, and magneto.

Price of Fuel driven airplanes.

When, just over 14 years ago, the Wright brothers had gone far enough in their gliding to fit a motor to an airplane, this engine was installed in what was nothing more than an improved glider. When, also, other pioneers arose, the influence of glider construction, with its cleverly improvised structures of wood, made itself felt throughout a whole succeeding phase.

Price of Fuel Expenditure on petrol is at present one of the biggest items in operating commercial air service, and it is therefore easy to imagine what a One of the indications, when any era has had its day, and is doomed revolution will be brought about when these oil engines, with their low-priced fuel, are adapted to reguto give way to something better, is found in difficulties which present lar airway use. Oil engines and metal construction will, between them, be the "open sesame" to a new era in flying. They should reduce the cost of air transport by as much as 50 per cent. These serial transports should, eventually, offer a solution in themselves of the problem of distributing population more evenly throughout the territories of the world. Within these pages, every unbiased reader finds much to ponder, much to rejoice in, much to learn, and much that may cause him to revise his old concept of prayer.

It is the mission of prayer to silence fear ss, and with power to waken man-nd out of its dream of sickness and sin, fear and sorrow; and through this spiritual awakening bring about release and redemption from all that is contrary to God's will.

Mary Baker Eddy

You will naturally want to hear something about the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. Since her earliest childhood, Mary Baker Eddy loved the Bible and lived close to God, good. Up to the time of her discovery of Christian Science, she was frail, delicate. Mrs. Eddy was highly cultured and intellectually gifted, and she had a wide outlook on life. At about the age of forty-five she met with an accident which she met with an accident which doctors pronounced fatal. In her woman begged the friends at her bedside to leave her alone with the Bible. As she read, in the ninth chapter of Matthew, of the instantaneous healing of the man sick of the palsy, the revelation of God's will so illuthe revelation of God's will so illumined her consciousness that she, too, rose from what was expected to be her death-bed, and walked, instanbe her death-bed, and walked, instan-taneously healed. Awed by this miracle, and impelled by her deep love for God and humanity, she then withdrew entirely from society, and, for three years, alone with the Bible. In her modest home in the town of Lyun, Massachusetts, she studied and pondered the great facts of spiritual being and spiritual law, to which a discovered the Science of His perfect tainable here and now. And what discovered the Science of His perfect are the "angels" ascending and description and what are the "angels" ascending and descriptions and the science of th creation, and wrote the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

For some years before publishing this immortal work Mrs. Eddy proved the truth of its teachings by healing all kinds of sickness by spiritual

Mrs. Eddy then entered upon a life of almost unparalleled spiritual and human activity, until, in the year 1910, she passed on in her ninetieth year. It is not too much to say that every waking hour of these forty-five years was spent in highest, humblest service to God and humanity. The Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science was rarely seen, but this revelation has shed the light of God, good, broadcast over all the earth. Confronted with the superhuman task of spreading, and etablishing, the knowledge of Christian Science throughout the world, Mrs. Eddy wrote in one of her hymns (Poems, p. 14): Mrs. Eddy then entered upon a life

"Shepherd, show me how to go
O'er the hillside steep,
How to gather, how to sow,—
How to feed Thy sheep;
I will listen for Thy voice,
Lest my footsteps stray;
I will follow and rejoice
All the rugged way."

The way was often rendered very ugged, but with tireless fidelity, wiscom, moral courage, and unselfed ove she held the great truth of hristian Science before the hungry, outsting, hostile gaze of the whole world. Bhe trod the way rejoicingly, assured that it was the way of primitive Christianity, revealed by Christ easy, the Way-shower.

Mrs. Eddy was also led to establish the vast organization of The lother Church and its branches, ally increasing in number, power, and influence, and forever safe-marded by the flawless wisdom of the Hy-laws in her Church Manual.

confusion, and disappointment. So much so that some discouraged perpensions have altogether ceased praying.

Mankind is puzzled to know how to cope with its problems of poverty, sickness, sin, sorrow, and all their and consequences, and skepticism and atheism have almost stifled humanity's best hopes. The "I don't understand" attitude, or agnosticism is in fact held by many today. Boston, Massachusetts, in the church edifice, Falmouth, Norway and atheism have almost stified humanity's best hopes. We know that Christians do not gious views of modern Christians are not obscured by many superstitions. For instance, have you not met people who, disregarding God, believe in good and bad luck, seek to read their fate through palmistry, astrology, and even through a pack of cards? In other words, through some human superstition? Again, do not others resign themselves to sickness, and to other afflictions, because they halters them to be the will of is views of modern Christians are God? And do not insurance agencies, even in this supposedly enlightened age, designate earthquakes and other wholesale disasters as "acts of God as Love Now, the complete and final reve-lation of God has come through Christian Science with its clear, practical message on the subject of demonstrable prayer; that is to say, prayer bringing to mortals definite proof that God is infinite Truth, Life, and Love, whom none need fear, but whom all must obey—the God to whom all may find access, through whom all may find redemption from every phase of evil here and now.

God, the giver of all good, and of good alone, is unceasingly pouring forth life, holiness, health, intelligence, and joy on all His spiritual creation, and Christian Science teaches us exactly how to perceive. to receive, and to manifest these practical tokens of divine Love.

It is the mission of prayer to silence fear, and spiritually attune the ear to the infinite harmony of God's creation, which is totally free from fear, sickness, sin, materiality, and mortality. As God is revealed, humanity is healed.

I should like to quote you a few lines from a well-known hymn which indicates the different stages of prayer (Christian Science Hymnal, p. 31);

'Prayer is the heart's sincere desire, Uttered or unexpressed;

"Prayer is the simplest form of speech, That infant lips can try;

The Majesty on high. Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,

The Christian's native air:

His watchword overcometh death-He enters heaven with prayer." Jacob's Ladder

Prayer might be likened to Jacob's adder, of which we read in Genesis are the "angels" ascending and descending this ladder of thought? Angels are not fancy, winged figures. On page 581 of the Christian Science textbook we find this simple and appealing definition of angels: "God's thoughts passing to man; spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect; the inspiration of goodness, purity, and immortality, counteracting all evil, sensuality, and mortality."

So you see that every true, spiritual thought and desire entertained by you is your link with God, everpresent divine Mind.

Teachableness Perhaps the very first rung in this ladder of prayer is indicated in Job's humble desire: "That which I see not teach thou me." This desire indicates the teachable, humble, listening attitude, whereby a mortal does not seek to gain God's ear for the purpose of pouring out his mortal woes, but seeks to incline his own ear in order that, through spiritual sense, he may catch the pure, healing.

be, health is available to all, through spiritual sense, he may catch the pure, healing, reassuring messages of Truth and Love. This willingness to learn more about God, and God's image, humbles intellectual vanity, pride of opinion, pessimism, and leads up to the next rungs of hope, faith, expectancy of good.

Mountaineers find that their range of view widens as they leave the valley; so true thoughts and right desires grow stronger as they ascend above the valley of materialistic thought and aspire to the heights of spiritual perception. It may seem a long way to the top of the ladder of prayer,—to the summit of spiritual understanding,—but Christian Science teaches that from the start joy is added to joy, and that with every rung attained, conditions of health and character are improved.

Another rung in this ladder of according thought is the ringuing.

Now, this is what happens when the recognition of spiritual light, the recognition of spiritual light.

Another rung in this ladder of according thought is the ripening desire to understand and obey God's will rejoicingly, knowing it to bestow only holiness, health, and perfect purity. This resolve always to obey is: The Science of Demonstrable Prayer.

sinner, and raised the dead, he was obeying God's will. This being so, it is logical to admit that these evils were then—and are today—in every case directly contrary to God's will. They will also agree that God, whom Christian Science designates as divine Principle, has one uniform purpose, beneficent towards all, and the same in all ages.

Disease, then, as well as sin, is unchristian, contrary to God's will, or Christ Jesus would not, and could not, have healed it, and Christian Science would not be healing sickness all over the world as it is doing today. This recognition of dou-good-will and its practical results whenever it is understood, and obeyed, brings us to a wonderful rung in the ladder of prayer. We meet here the most cheering, strengthening, indispensable comrade in daily life—the angel of gratitude. Gratitude

"But," one may say, "gratitude is quite natural when everything is going well, but here am I ill, worried, afraid, anxious about my loved ones, and about the future, so how can I possibly be expected to feel any gratitude?" Real gratitude is much more than a personal matter, and I invite you to consider gratitude from a somewhat wider standpoint. If there were only matter, brain, and the five senses,—and no God, that is, nothing to guide, and to guard mortals from their own undoing there would be no moral standard, no kindness, no justice, no honosty, no capacity to distinguish right from no capacity to distinguish right from wrong, for there would be no right, and therefore no ability whatever to resist temptation. In short, but for the invisible, potent influence of God, good, counteracting evil in the measure in which it is obeyed, mankind would speedily be engulfed in a moreas of materialism from which it there would be recognized. there would be no escape.

Through Christian Science, one learns to know God as perfect, operative, divine Principle, Love, available to mortals in their every need, and therefore gratitude is boundless and unwavering. This gratitude abides in spite of the discordant evidence of the physical senses, for spiritual gratitude, which is allied to spiritual understanding, is fed from the deep, everlasting wells of divine Love. Through steadfast gratitude, courage is maintained, discouragement is banished, and even under trying circumstances, the preserve of spritter. cumstances the prayer of spiritual gratitude looks Godward and cries: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." An understanding of God's beneficent law heals sick minds and odies. It is in the darkest hour that those transparent, spiritual qualities hath not given us the spirit of fear; through which divine Love shines but of power, and of love, and of a with healing light. Healing Sickness

There is a question which some of you may be asking yourselves, namely: How can prayer heal a sick body without the additional use of material means? Christian Science ladder, of which we read in Genesis that it was "set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it."

Note that this ladder was set up on earth, which indicates that God, good, is not remote but ever-present, and that heaven is not a distant good, is not remote but ever-present, and that heaven is not a distant place to be reached after death, but a divine state of consciousness which is not a divine state of consciousness which is not a divine state of consciousness which is not remove the shadow, would remove the object which was casting the shadow, without touching the floor; and the shadow would vanish. So Christian Science deals directly with the fear and the mental discord expressed on the body as sickness, and as harmony is restored in the mind of the patient, the sickness, which was only a physical effect or shadow of a so-called mental cause, disappears. I say "so-called" mental cause, because God, the one perfect Mind, is the one perfect Cause; so, in absolute Truth, God, there is neither a physical nor a mental cause for sickness.

The doorway of health, God-given, unchanging health, stands wide open in front of every person in this world today. There is one universal health, here for all to enjoy—the "health of his countenance." Health can neither spiritual understanding, which re-generates mind and body. Every physician will tell you that fear is one of the worst foes of health, and closely shuttered house, with the brilliant sun shining outside; would it be reasonable for you to stay be-hind closed shutters praying for the sun to shine in? Obviously not! The change would have to take place in you, not in the sun. Now, a great many of us have, so to speak, been sitting in mental darkness, behind the shut-ters of fear, discouragement, resentment, hardness, shutting out from our consciousness the unceasing love and bounty of God, good; and remaining deaf to the joyous, true thoughts, the angels of divine Mind. But those shutters are nothing but false beliefs, and they cease to ob-struct in proportion as thought is struct in proportion as thought in firmly held to the truth about Go and man. In proportion as the angels of right expectation, obedience, courage, and gratitude are faithfully entertained, they admit the everpresent light of love and truth.

The Real and the Unreal You remember our Master's parable of the tares and wheat? This parable foretells the destruction of all belief in matter, sin, and fear, through the recognition of the infinitude and immortality of Spirit, for nothing is true but Truth. Christian Science designates as real all that is God-made, and as unreal that which is of mortal invention, and not Godmade. This Science of right thinking therefore reveals the necessity for keeping a clear mental line of de-marcation between the real and the unreal, for through this clear mental distinction, true ideas—wheat—are garnered in consciousness, and false beliefs—tares—are gathered out, tied nto bundles, and burnt-destroyed by true ideas. How do you regard sorrow, for instance, as a tare or as wheat? Sorrow is apt to be self-centered, and us of our harvest of joy; and it is not only robbing us, but also all with whom we associate. Now, how may we gather our harvest of joy, and be comforted? By expressing divine qualities, by grasping nobler motives, and by reflecting the Mind which is God. Through Christian Science, many a one has found that the love of God enters the heavy heart, turning its selfishness into unselfed love, its fretting into peace, and its mourning into joy. The prayer of rejoicing is one of the rungs in Jacob's Returning to this line of demar ation between the real and the unreal, this line which is never blurred

In the Christian Science textbook (p. 410) we find this statement: "Christian scientific practice begins with Christ's keynote of harmony, their petition is sincere, they will gestions are the voice of the seek to express always, and only, stranger, the anti-Christ. No matter how tions, or human circumstances, may seem to be, this divine command and benediction, "Be not afraid," holds good and operates for good. What is "Lead me" is petition. The land of never faileth. good and operates for good. What is the remedy for fear? In the New Testament, we find the only real recipe in the world for overcoming Mark it well, use it well, and it will serve you well. In the words of John, it is this: "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out God is infinite Love, infinite Spirit, which knows no fear, because Spirit knows no matter, and where there is no belief in matter

I want to ask you a question: Can you think of any form of fear which does not in some way relate to matter? Is not fear always concerned about the material body, about material possessions, about financial for-tunes or misfortunes? Fear always tunes or misfortunes? Fear always attaches itself to some material, temporal concept; and therefore fear is idolatrous. Fear is never entertained about anything spiritual and real. So, one cannot leave the root of matter and only dock the shoots of fear, if one would be free. You will agree that, but for the belief in matter, there would be nothing through which fear could express, or embody, its false beliefs of sickness. body, its false beliefs of sickness, sin and death.

Refuge in Love Christian Science teaches that divine Love casts out fear, because it spiritualizes thought. We lose the fear of fear when we see that, since there is no fear in Life, God, fear is lifeless, and powerless to affect either the health or the life of man. To the Samaritan woman, Christ Jesus the Samaritan woman, Christ Jesus said: "They that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Not in matter and in fear, but "in spirit and in truth." Fear is overcome through transferring dependence from matter to Spirit. Health, strength, activity, intelligence, are all of them God's spiritual gifts to this image. Divine Mind has never His image. Divine Mind has never withdrawn one of these blessings, and man in God's likeness is unceasand man in God's likeness is unceasingly expressing them. One aspect of healing in Christian Science might be epitomized as "letting go," and "holding on." Letting go of matter, holding on to Love, which is Life.

The inspired message of the Psalmist, "Thou shalt not be afraid for the

Now, this is what happens when spiritual light, the recognition of God as infinite good, omnipresent Love, begins to blot out the mortal belief in fear and evil. Christian Science teaches us to look constantly and confidently into God's mirror—the reflection of good, and seed seed to see the seed of the seed o Lord, are changed into the same imthe reflection of good, and good only. And what do we see there? Spiritual life, love, holiness, health and joy—

Only through reflecting God's connothing but the temporal and false. Only through reflecting God's consciousness do we learn the truth nitely states that "all things were about ourselves, our fellowmen, and made by him;" and also that "withabout ourselves, our fellowmen, and all creation. And does the truth, you ask, accomplish anything practical?

It does. Through understanding this statement in the Christian Science textbook (p. 478), "That only is real which reflects God," I can testify to the disappearance of a large growth, tiently to express melody—good—recogning which a surgeon had said only and turn thought again and regarding which a surgeon had said to his patient that it could only be removed by an operation. Obviously, this discordant belief, this shadow, did not reflect God, and therefore it had no life nor mind, nor truth, nor substance; no soul, nor principle, and no law to support it. So, the be-lief in it, the fear of it, and finally its outward appearance vanished en-tirely after a short period of Chris-life or is real. Disease and sin are but the mirage of mortal thought.

When any fear or temptation seems to press upon you, instead of brooding over the discord, turn right about mentally; refuse to entertain the wrong thoughts or fears, and take refuge in the mirror of Life, Love, and Truth. Look straight into this mirror, God's reflection, in order that you may be "changed into the same image," and do not look away fron. divine Love, and Love's image, until this Love, like light, has blotted out the delusion. Seek perfection through the reflection of God, good. Let us now consider another in connection with prayer: the ques-uprightness is here, through upright thoughts, motives, and desires, all of them inspired by God and leading to God. These desires are destined to be awakened, strengthened, and ful-filled in every one here today. Why? Because God is the irresistible attraction of good, sooner or later drawing all, and revealing to all the pure, precious gift of spiritual son-

Melody

Now let us suppose that your life is a melody from which you are learning to exclude every false note. A simple musical illustration may help us. Let us say that you are enjoying the performance of some great planist, who, at his recital, interprets the classics—Bach, Beethovan, Schumann, and so forth You practice which have preceded it?
This same artist probably started to learn the piano when he was a little boy, and spent many painful hours—no doubt painful to others as well as to himself—mastering chords and started to himself—mastering chords and in God's image expresses every scales and, later on, struggling to master the piece of music in front of him. Perhaps, after a year or two of practice, a charming, simple Rondo of Mozart was given him to learn. What a lot of wrong notes he played! What a lot of right notes he left out! Now, please consider this point for a moment. Where were the wrong notes which the little boy played? Were they in the composer's tiently to express melody—good—only, and turn thought again and only, and turn thought again and again, always joyously, always thankfully, to the perfect page of God's creation, which is always present. In God's plan, every idea has its place and a divine purpose to fulfili. The true melody, divine Love, is everpresent. Let us learn to express love perfectly. Isaiah says: "The Lord shall comfort Zion: ... joy and glad-ness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody."

Joy, gladness, thanksgiving—the ever-present escort of angels, leading thought upward and onward. Perseverance

In order that our lives may ex-press unbroken melody, another quality, or idea, is needed, that is:

Jesus often spoke to his disciples Jesus often spoke to his disciples of the need of watching, and of keeping one's light burning. He spoke also, not only of the "first watch" but of the "second watch" and of the "third watch." If the solving of your problem seems to be very slow, then take courage: for Jesus said of those who continue to watch the great facts of spiritual being: "Blessed are those servants, whom the lord when those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: . . . There is another very powerful element of prayer to which I will now draw your attention, and that is the prayer of protest. In the chapter on Prayer (p. 12)—those wonderful on Prayer (p. 12)—those wonderful seventeen pages already mentioned —Mrs. Eddy refers to Jesus, "whose humble prayers," she says, "were deep and conscientious protests of Truth.-of man's likeness to God and of man's unity with Truth and Love." Where and when did Jesus pray this powerful prayer of protest-the truly protestant prayer of man's likeness to God, and of man's health and immortality? is, therefore, the rung on which mortals learn to drop discouragement, worry, and self-will. Christian Science teaches the great hecessity for understanding the statement in the Lord's Prayer, "Thy will be done."

Ged's Will

These words, so full of blessedness, "Thy will be done." have been strangely misconstrued. By many, God has been regarded as exacting, almost cruel, and sad events have been attributed to His jurisdiction. In considering this question of God's and sad acreates have been attributed to His jurisdiction. In considering this question of God's expection. Ascending the surpression, manifestation or reflect from their various beliefs; they were due to gnorance. And all the time, there is something for each one to do! Let us suppose that you and spining outside; would be continued to His jurisdiction. In considering this question of God's eristion of God's eristion of God's eristion of God's perfection. In St. Paul; the words and works of Christ Jesus asid that "the truth shall make you free." Through the shall distinct the shall make you free. Through the shall distinct the shall make you free. Through the shall make you free. Through the shall demand the there is spiritual and indestructible, and he therefore healed the man of his oblige him to play the wrong notes or did he merely is spiritual and indestructible, and he therefore healed the man of his oblige him to play what he believed? Did the plane or wait vice versa? And where did the prayer of protest of Truth, and of a sound of manifestation of Truth, and of mortal belief in blindness, the prayed the prayer of protest of Truth, and of mortal belief in blindness. He prayed the prayer of protest of Truth, when he said: "The comming of Christ, when he said: "The comming of Christ is spiritual in the comming of Christ, Finally, Jesus prayed this prayer of protest in his own behalf, and after three days of wrestling with the be-lief of death, he emerged from the sealed tomb, free, consecrated, trans-figured by his uninterrupted reflection of immortal Love.

My friends, we stand face to face with the same problems which Jesus faced and we stand hand in hand with the same power which upheld Christ Jesus, and we today can pray this same inspired prayer of protest and obtain the same results. The Christ-power is available to you and to me to-day, for the Christ-idea is ever-present.

So God, divine Mind, reaches us through right thoughts, inspired desires; through spiritual qualities of joy, peace, and purity, and these spiritual ideas and qualitition in prayer may be right or it may be mistaken. power of the Christ is operative in our midst now. The Psalmist rejoiced in this eternal truth which is "the in this eternal truth which is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever" when he said: "Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation; there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." This dwelling is spiritual consciousness, the reflection of God, good. "For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." thee in all thy ways.'

A Sanctuary for All In one of the busy thoroughfares

in London, a philanthropist erected a simple little chapel into which young and old, rich and poor, the to his disciples, as recorded in the last two verses of Matthew's Gospel are these: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the sanctuary of divine Love. How may the name of the Father, and of the sanctuary of divine Love. How may we enter this spiritual sanctuary? teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Now what is the meaning of these words, uttered just before the fleshly disappearance of Jesus, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world"? What is this "I"? Not the visible, personal Jesus, but the Christ, to which Jesus hare faithful witness are many suggestions of fear, sickare many suggestions of fear, sick-ness, and sin; and they are always unreal, unworthy, and powerless. Through the holiness, the joyousness, from the beginning to the end of his glorious earthly ministry. Without this Christ, the true idea, or understanding, of God and man, Jesus and the continuity of your own reflection of God, good, you may always abide in His love and care. "The maked on the water; could not have fed the multitude nor walked on the water; could not have raised the dead, nor risen from the tomb; nor could he have left us the immortal ideas plainly recorded in the New Testament. Without this one Christ, there would have been no revelation of Christian Ecience.

It is this redemptive, healing Christ-leea, or understanding of God them." We can all meet with this one Christ in the temple of purified consciousness. All, without exception, may abide in this temple or consciousness of peace, joy, and love, hearing always the melody and harmony of Spirit. St. Paul's appeal knocks gently at your mental doorway, saying: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you"?

For about 30 years these Turkey work or leather-covered chairs are frequently mentioned in inventories, both in England and America, and it is not uncommon to find listed a large number, from one to three dozen chairs (stools or cushions) in

The greatest use of this work was uring the first half of the seven-enth century. After this period, rocades and other materials graduly replaced it. As neither it nor leather contemporary were approximately the seventemporary was a series of the series ally replaced it. We note, on examining the enlarged photograph of the partly worn section, that the ground is of a coarse meshed canvas, and that a heavy woolen thread has been drawn through it, then back, to be knotted and cut. In this particular example the method of tying the knot has been hard to determine, but this is not of vital significance.

The above agrees with the description of the work given in all the authorities. There is scarcely a book on old furniture that does not mention Turkey work, but there is usually little more than the statement that it was made after the manner described, and that it was an imitation of Oriental rug work and was in general use during the seventeenth century.

In addition to the pile effect, this example and the few others I have seem seem curiously to imitate Oriental design. In the latter we realise that some motive, foreign to ourselves, was in the worker's mind. In Turkey work, the same design would appear to be aimed at without being understood. The result is not precisely mechanical, but it is interrupted. It does not mean anything. rupted. It does not mean anything. It may be that at a later time designs of an English or a Continental style were followed, while the pile method was retained. Eastern Incentive for Turkey Work
Oriental rugs were first introduced into Europe by the Moors, when they invaded Spain. Later, when Venice and Holland held the monopoly of trade with the East, they were among the greatest luxuries of those splendid times.

The first mention of their appearance in England is in the thirteenth century, with marriage of Eleanor of Castile to Prince Edward, afterward Edward I, and the son of Henry III. The Castilian attendants of the Princess used them to cover the dais or throne platform, as well as the seats and tables.

The term carpet was not applied

The term carpet was not applied scalusively to floor covering. In fact, these articles were used more on leats and tables, as well as for wall hangings, than for floors. We may semember that Cardinal Woolsey lung the hall at Hampton Court with Driental rugs. In fact, when the term "Spanish carpets" was used in connection with the courtiers of the Castillian Princess, it is not quite certain whether a genuine Oriental or a Spanish imitation was meant.

It is thought that the manufacture was not attempted in western Europe earlier than the fourteenth century.

Early Mentioned as Abundant It is interesting to note, and this brings me back to the subject of my paper, that the turkey work developed hearly if not quite as early as the hand-knotted carpets. I have said that it goes back to Elisabethan lays. George Leland Hunter, in his "Decorative Textiles," gives an interesting quotation from Holinshed's "Chronicles" (1577), as follows:

In this way, the women of a community would be accustomed to working together in larger or smaller groups, or to having the knowledge necessary for skilled labor in their own homes. Such work would be called home industry, and as time went on, the profits go to the work-ers themselves. When we learn that turkey work was designated thus, it seems clear that numbers of women knew how to do it, just as they knew how to spin, weave, and make all kinds of garments, hangings and fine

So it does not seem to be stretching a point to suggest that the women who came to the American Colonies, ing for the most part of the working class, were well instructed in turkey work as they were in better turkey work as they were in better finest specimens were made in the known domestic crafts, and that this north, in Canada and Nova Scotia. ### One-Time Perfect Gentility

Special Correspondence HE quaint old volume found in an antique shop took the reader's fancy straight back to the days of our great-grandmother as she turned the pages of "The Lady's Guide to Perfect Gentility." The imagination lingered in rooms set with haircloth furniture, crayon por-traits, and antimacassars, those old crochet-work "tidies," designed to protect cushions from the hair ointments commonly used in the early nineteenth century. Amid such scenes the ringletted figures seemed to step about in their crinolines, charming in spite of the rigid conventionalities of the time. What rules had to be observed if one were to be considered "genteel" at that period! So many things a lady must not do! In regard to attire, she must not, until she was married, wear rich cashmeres, furs, or jewels. (The man of her choice, in due time, was sup-posed to present her with all these.) The senior ladies must make the ap-parel suitable to their juniors' years, refraining from gaudy colors, late fashions, feathers, and the like. Continental Pewter In Vienna

Descriptions of pewter in Central Europe is that of Dr. Karl Ruhmann, Vienna. He has several pieces which any museum would be proud to own, to say nothing of the many more which are less rare but would be prises for the ordinary collector. His apartment, where his treasures are exhibited, is worth coming many a mile to visit for anyone wishing to study continental pewter. He has, for example, a so-called Mars dish of about 1600, and probably made by François Briot. It is the largest and finest of the known fancy dishes. Only a few specimens exist, such as those in the Louvre and in the Dresden Museum. In the center is a warrior fully armed Surround.

the Dresden Museum. In the center is a warrior fully armed. Surrounding him are two zones of rich relief work, the inner one bearing four allegorical figures and the other ornamented by arabesques. Numerous Nations Represented Here Another show dish is that known to collectors as the "Adam and Eve" because of the figures in the center field. It is also of French origin, dating from about 1600, and it has also two zones about the central figures. The inner zone again de-picts allegorical figures, while the outer portrays 12 Roman emperors on horseback. The "Iglau State Dish" is another rare specimen, Iglau being a town in Moravia, which is now a province of Czechoslovakia. The plate is 19 inches in diameter. In the center is a figure representing Europe. Two rows of embossed ornamentation leck the margin, with rich engravings in between.

He has, further, a dish embossed and engraved by Michel Hemersan of Eger, made in the sixteenth century, and a large pewter can with two side handles and slender neck, believed to have been fashioned in Nürnberg in the fifteenth century.

A pewter sand-box with hunting the market. In the twelfth century scenes in relief grips our attention. Only two or three of these are known of the Erzgebirge, between Saxony to exist today, and it is thought they came originally from the Town the pewter industry came to be

The Renaissance was the age of the corporations and guilds, and hence the time of the guild mugs and badges of pewter.

In the seventeenth century came the broad-brimmed dishes and pewter took on the name of the "silver of the citizen." It commenced to pass rapidly now to the general public. Even then, however, the most beautifully adorned dishes were the pride of the upper middle class household. just as in the first half of the nine teenth century it came to be the pride of the peasant's household. Porcelain had then come into use: china and earthenware were ousting pewter increasingly until the day came when its price grew cheaper and cheaper, when the less wealthy classes of the working people could themselves afford to buy ceramic ware. ### Where the Wars of the Roses Began in the Inner Temple Garden, which is being restored. It was a white rose of York, "because," Sir Francis said, "the Duke of York is a Bencher of the Inner Temple." The restoration of these gardens, which, in the summer, will present a wonderful blush of color, provides a link with the Wars of the Roses.

Underwick's Calendar describes the site as "the subject of much ancient tradition, not the least noteworthy of which is the alleged gathering of the red and white roses by the respective champions of York and Lancaster before the outbreak of the civil strife known as the Wars of the Roses." Roses in the time of Chaucer were very prolific in England, as is known from his writings, and these were probably cultivated in the Temple Garden with other sweet-smelling shrubs, at least as early as the time of Henry VI. it was 4 years old with two symmetrically developed main stems.

March winds split one of the stems several inches down the trunk.

"Someone advised: 'Cut it off, the parts will never reunite.' But that meant a lopsided tree; to prune back both branches would mean the loss of chest transaction. both branches would mean the loss of about two years' growth. Hoping that the severed parts would grow together, I tied the split branch fast to the trunk; but six months' time failed to effect a joining. When I removed the bandages the tree spread apart in a most distressing manner. At that moment the word 'glue' flashed into my thought. Hardly daring to leave the tree lest, without support, it would tear completely apart, I ran into the house to get a bottle of liquid glue which I always kept on my desk.

"With help in holding up the partially severed stem, I poured the / Shakespeare, too, in "Richard III" speaks of

"In September when I removed the bandages and examined the tree no trace of the damage could be seen. The split branch had put forth a growth almost equal to that of the opposite branch, and was forcing its way out from the wrappings that held it to the iron stake. So thorough a joining had taken place that the glue had seemingly become a part of the tree and there was not even the slightest evidence of a scar."

A little bit of Arisons or New Mex-A Fad With a Background

Speaking of styles returning after a number of years, one learns that 40 years ago the German people and the English created a market for cacti for greenhouses and window gardens. They had to send to Amer-ica for cacti because these are almost ica for cacti because these are almost entirely American plants and grow abundantly only in South America, Central America, Mexico, and in the extreme south of the United States, in Texas, New Mexico, Arisona, and California. In the more northern states, a few varieties are found wild, but they are less characteristic.

Mr. Hill says:

"It is our idea to give the little girl with a little garden growing on the highway an opportunity equal to that of anyone to show what she can do, for our purpose is not only to ornament this international highway on the Pacific, but to inculcate and inassembled a large number of cacti.

The various bulbous plants must be well represented by snowdrops. scillas, hyacinths, tulips, daffodils and crocus. These, at least, are indispensable for their unrivaled beauty in spring. GOVERNMENT music may be alow in motion at the outset. but once going, it finds as lively a pace as any guild or league. The Festival of Chamber Music instituted at the Library of Congress in Washington under the endowment of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge was at first a mere series of concerts such as could be got up almost anywhere. It scarcely showed any marks of distinction as far as the programs were concerned. Somewhat like the parcel post when it originally began to function, it pulled along at a rather laboring gait. It seemed to represent Uncle Sam under swkward circumstances, as somebody laying hold of an unfamiliar and uncomfortable task.

But an end has evidently come familiar and uncomfortable task.

But an end has evidently come to that state of affairs. The announcement of the festival arrangements for this season bears promise of things brilliant and impressive. To begin with the festival will be altogether up with the day. There will be dignity of presentation, but no conventionality of material. The festival guests will cease to regret that Mrs. Coolidge moved her concerts from the Music Temple on South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., to the auditorium, her gift, in the courtyard of the Library of Congress, Capitol Hill.

And then, the time of year! The autumn did very well at the start, because continuing the Pittsfield plan. But the Potomac is later than the Housatonic autumn, and instead of anticipating, collides with the regular concert calendar. The spring undoubtedly will prove more acceptable.

And now to note what is to take place, music of the newest and music of the oldest types will be offered the festival guests. There you have the mode of 1927-28. A ballet written (imagine it! for the Library of Congress will be produced; and the composer is no one but Stravinsky. The piece will be put on the stage of the little arena of the Library by Bolm. On the question of form in chamber music composition, nobody has clearer judgment, methinks, than Adolfo Betti, first violinist of the Flonzaley Quartet. His orchestra gives vent to one of the greatest noises I ever heard, particu-larly in the Singakademie, which is very resonant. For this old concert hall, with its famous acoustics, has

Reinhold Wolff seems to employ such an orchestra contrary to the feeling of modern music, which is more inclined to the chamber orchestra. But clined to the chamber orchestra. But alas, the quantity of musical ideas does not keep pace with the pomp of his scoring. Now and then, some traces of individuality are to be discovered amidst the allusions to the "Mastersingers," especially in the last movement. On the whole, Reinhold Wolff is not so promising as he promses to be. Let us not, however, give him up for the future.

ST. LOUIS—As Carl Schuricht, guest conductor of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, was unable to appear at the concerts of Feb. 24 and 25, Sandor Harmati, conductor of the Omaha Symphony Orchestra, with only two rehearsals, conducted Schumann's Overture to "Manfred" and Dvořák's Violoncello Concerto and Symphony "From the New World."

keeping his program brief. It in-cluded only four numbers: Schön-berg's "Verklärte Nacht," scored this time for 13 strings; Stravin-sky's "Ragtime," Honegger's Piano Concertino and Hindemith's Kammermusik, op. 24, no. 1. Except for the Schönberg, these were all heard for the first time in Boston, which seems to be in itself a justification of Mr. Fiedler's organization.

Schönberg is "modernist," but his op. 4 is not. Its romantic parentage is obvious, and its personages are as loquacious as Gurnemanz and Mark themselves. Stravinsky's "Ragtime" perhaps should have been named "Jazz," but it doesn't matter, since its measures are merely barren, Honegger's Concertino is more pre-tentious, if not more important. The time is long past when dissonance and irregular rhythms could conceal sterility. Nor is a tendency to cast each new work in a different mold a proof of originality. Nevertheless, dull music may assume a certain plausibility when associated with famous names, and these two the composer's parenthesis.

teachings of the master Christian, cross on Calvary, Jesus gave a splendid example of this teaching when, in exalted faith and gentle consideration for his enemies, he prayed, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Many times thereafter did his disciples and the apostles both love and pray for their persecutors. Tennyson writes of such, that they Bore and forbore, and did not tire, Like Stephen, an unquenched fire. He heeded not reviling tones,

After delivering his indictment against his persecutors, Stephen was beset by them and cast him out of the city; and while they were stoning him, as we are told in Acts, he called out to God and prayed, finishing with the Christlike petition, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." To Stephen there was no enmity; his heart was too full of love to entertain resentment toward the mistaken mortals who knew not what they were doing.

What lessons these great characters and the incidents connected with them teach us! And an understand-

Overcoming Enmity

WRITTEN POR THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

As we study the words of the Master concerning the problem of dealing with one's enemies, it becomes apparent that he taught two principal things which should be done, namely, to love those who manifest enmity, and to pray for them. Indeed, Jesus practiced these very things, and he left us abelian source will enable any sincere person to overcome in the same way. Mary Baker Eddy's teachings are clear on this subject. Thousands have proved them to be unfailing in their good effects. By these teachings her followers are enabled to abolish resemblem. these precepts: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. lation cannot make anyone happy; while loving prayers bring joy and and taught. Concerning prayer for world-wide peace and good will, and her own attitude toward those who explaining how one can obey his criticized and persecuted her, Mrs. loving commandment and find great Eddy writes, in "The First Church happiness in doing so. Under the of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany". most terrible of persecution, on the (p. 220), "Each day I pray for the pacification of all national difficulties, for the brotherhood of man, for the end of idolatry and infidelity, and for the growth and establishment of Christian religion-Christ's Christianity." And a little farther on she adds, "Each day I pray: 'God bless my enemies: make them Thy friends; give them to know the joy and the peace of love."

In following these teachings, one overcomes the sense of enmity as he rejects the harmful thinking which would desire that an enemy may suffer, and truly hopes that his seeming enemies may experience the joy and peace which come from knowing God. Hoping for such experiences only, Christians grow in grace, happiness, and mental poise; and as opportunity is presented, they prove the sincerity of their prayers by acting in accord with their petitions. Mrs. Eddy's teachings on this point are clear. She writes in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 11), "We must love our enemies in all the manifestations wherein and whereby we love our friends; must even try not to expose their faults, but to do them good whenever opportunity occurs.

When it is seen that the unparalleled success of Christ Jesus in his work for humanity was in no small measure due to his understanding and use of the rule of loving one's enemies, and that Mrs. Eddy used the same rule consistently throughout her life, succeeding beyond the present comprehension of mankind, the importance of this rule must appear. Loving and praying for one's enemies are not only true evidences of Christian character, but are the ways in which to happity life; and joy and peace attend such efforts with no sad aftermaths to darken the chambers of memory.

Thinking, praying, and loving inaccord with these examples will surely overcome all enmity; for the illusion fades into nothingness, and Clowell & Co., Hoston: There does not appear to be much liquidation over-hanging the market at the moment, and even the protessionals are represented on the "buy" side. It is significant and seems to confirm our opinion that they are dispasing of stocks on all advances. There is still a short interest, however, and that is a factor which must be considered in basing campaigns over an extended period.

Clark, Childs & Co., New York; Considering the readjustment which has already taken pixes, the demonstrated selectivity of the market and the fact that fundamentals are not adverse, a policy of making purchases during weakness would seem the most desirable. At this writing further weakness seems probable, but it should strengthen rather than impair the market's position.

Gurnett & Co., Boston: It looks to us like again becoming a question of what are the best stocks to buy on reactions. We believe automobile stocks will be the leaders, and we especially like Studebaker and Willys-Overland in the medium and low-priced class. We would not advise the purchase of Mack Trucks.

would not advise the purchase of Mack Trucks.

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston: There will probably have to be some major event of importance to turn the market one way or the other. It is quite possible that there may ensue a period of backing and filling until the presidential nominations. This is the next major event of importance now discernible.

Schirmer, Atherton & Co., Boston: While we consider additional liquidation probable in many industrial securities, the good outlook for railroads would seem to justify purchase of their stocks on further selling. Acquisition of utility stocks during recessions also appears advisable.

Tucker, Anthony & Co., New York in the control of the contro

WEEK'S REVIEW

Regards Future-Rail

Financial Developments

Volume of trading on the New York stock market last month was the largest on record for any February, sales totaling 47.165.193 shares. Dividend declarations in February exceeded those of January, but were lower as compared with December.

Both the New York Stock Exchange and the Curb Market made large additional listings last month. Bond offerings totaled $551,859,894 for February, the total being less than that of January. Call money rates were higher; time funds also were dearer. This week's trading on the New York stock market was characterized by a lack of speculative enthusiasm. Prices were irregular, with some specialties showing strength on bull operations. The hesitancy of the last two-or three less was still apparent and the volume of trading was rather small.

Trading in bonds was dull. Prices were heavy, those of the railroad issues magging somewhat. Financing by bonds this week amounted to $253, 583,000, this total, featured by the $100,000,000 St. Louis-San Francisco issue, being the largest since October.

The Crawford-Borotra struggle produced some of the finest tennis ever seen in Adelaide. The young Australian player, who captured the Victorian tennis championship in 1926, Barnard, president of the American tennis championship in 1926, save an almost faultless display of splendid backhand play, keeping Borotra away from the net.

In a doubles game the Australian team of G. L. Patterson and J. M. Hone defeated Borotra and Christian Boussus, 6-3, 6-2, 6-1, by sheer speed. The speedy service of the veteran Hone amazed the French players.

him one of the outstanding players of the year.

There is one club at least that is standing practically pat on its 1928 lineup. That is Cincinnati, the team that played the best bell in the National circuit during a period of two months near the end of the season but which played the worst ball in the league dusing the first three months. E. V. Purdy and M. F. Callaghan, both brilliant outfielders of the Sastile club last season, are the only outstanding additions. They will give the Reds a strong outfield with Zitsman, Alien, Bressler and Walker.

The Washington Senators have been taking on a great number of former college men lately, E. M. Barnes, new outfielder, comes from the University of Alabama; W. A. Dietrick, shortstop, is a University of Virginia alumnus; I. D. Hadley, outfielder, comes from Brown University; Paul Hopkins, pitcher, is a former Colgate star; H. M. Alabama graduate.

The great dearth of good baseball material has caused the majors to turn more attention to the development of the game among the hoys. Were the boys not interested, baseball would soon cease to flourish. Without material the major leagues would cease to function. This new idea of development should mean much hetter college teams in the future, also, and more material for college teams. There are many far-reaching benefits that junior baseball development will bring about in the game as a whole. Watch for them!

AUSTRALIA'S TENNIS TEAM

Patterson and Two Newcomers to Carry Davis Cup Hopes

MELBOURNE, Australia—Australia has chosen its team to contest the Davis Cup in 1928, and its primary hope is that it will survive the opening rounds long enough to meet the United States in the final round before the challenge round is played. Should the team win through to the challenge round against France, it has "a fair sporting chance of success," according to Norman E. Brookes, and as Brookes has never been known to become enthusiastic over anything, such an expression of opinion from one of the greatest players the world has ever seen should give the Australian team hope. MELBOURNE, Australia-Australia seen should give the Australian team hope.

Heading the team as captain and manager is Gerald L. Patterson, known wherever tennis is played, twice champion at Wimbledon, though strangely enough only once champion of Australia, and recognized as one of the leading doubles players of the world. The other members of the team are New Bouth Wales colts—a term which in Australia means young players—who are being given a chance—Jack Crawford and H. Hopman. A fourth, and perhaps a fifth man, may be and perhaps a fifth man, may chosen later. Patterson's Record

Patterson's Record

Everyone who knows lawn tennis knows Patterson. This will be the fifth time he has represented Australia in the Davis Cup contests. He first played at Sydney in 1919, when he defeated in the singles Lieut. Col. A. R. F. Kingscote and A. H. Lowe of the British Isles, and with N. E. Brookes won the doubles against Kingscote and A. E. Beamish. In New Zealand in 1920 both William T. Tilden 2d and William Johnston defeated him in the singles. In 1922 he defeated Henri Cochet and A. H. Gobert of France but Tilden and Johnston agains defeated him after he had won against the Spanish representatives. With Pat the Spanish representatives. O'Hara Wood he won the doubles against the United States pair—Tilden and Vincent Richards—in three straight sets. In 1924 Tilden and Rich-straight sets. In 1924 Tilden and Richards defeated him in the singles, but in 1925, in the interzone final, he swept J. René Lacoste, France, practically off the courts, and won in three straight sets, only to be beaten three days later by Jean Borotra.

Patterson won the singles championship at Wimbledon in 1919 and 1922. In 1919 with Brookes he won the doubles championship of the United doubles championship of the United States, and since then he has been twice runner-up in the same event, with Pat O'Hara Wood as his partner in 1924 and John B. Hawkes in 1925. He has won the singles championship of Victoria for eight out of the last nine years, and he won the doubles championship with various partners, from 1919 until 1925, and he has won the same honor twice since. Incident-ally, at one time or another, he has won the championship title of every other state in Australia. Business has gripped Patterson and the 1923 matches will see his last appearance in international tennis.

Crawford of New South Wales will be 20 years of age in March, 1928. He won the Australian junior double Australian doubles title in Though young, he is regarded as a player of the very first flight, having stamina and the real tennis sense. He has beaten both Patterson and another Davis Cup player in J. B.

MOTORIST MAY PAY BILL FOR INDIA'S ROADS

Petrol Tax Would, It Is Said. Prove Fairest Means of Raising Funds

CALCUTTA—The road problem in India is gradually assuming practical form owing to the discussions before the committee of the two houses of the Central Legislature. It is recognized that the roads should act as feeders to the railways and should be capable of taking the rapidly developing motor transport. For lorries they are mostly quite un-

Discussions before the committee of the Legislature at Delhi have centered mainly on the ways and means of raising money for the Road Fund. Many of the present roads are rapidly deteriorating. It is true that the bullock cart does most of the damage to the roads; but it would be practically impossible to the damage to the roads; but it would be practically impossible to collect the requisite funds from the humble bullock cart. The motorist therefore, it is agreed, will have to contribute the major share of the funds. It is pointed out that the motorist will at least save his tires and gain other benefits if India's roads are really improved.

Higher Petrol Duty It is also coming to be generally agreed that a small additional duty road fund applied to the roads. Fur-thermore a tax on imported petrol or alternatively on the number of has the great advantage that it is cars registered in the province.

It was all right, though, because shortly after-ward of Togo came agreed that a small additional duty on imported petrol is a more equitable method than increasing the duty on motor cars, a few months after they have been lowered, on demanding larger license fees.

To increase the duty on imported cars would be a serious check on India's development. To impose an additional license tax would hit the man who used his car and who used the roads, very little, just as much as the man who used both considerably.

A small tax on petrol would, however, only be paid in proportion as the owner of a car or a lorry used the roads, did most damage and would derive most benefit from a road fund applied to the roads. Fur-

"Yes, of course I could," said
Frances. "I'll start a few minutes

Frances came into the school a few minutes before nine, "we have a new pupil today and I have given her the seat across the aisle from you. Will you show her about the lessons and make her feel at home?"

"Yes," said Frances, smiling, "of course I will." So the new girl found a friend and was not at all lonely and strange in her new surround.

strange in her new surround Frances and her friend Jean walked tome together. As they passed the touse next door to where Frances ived, someone called from the front

Frances and Mr. Sun The sun rose up above his bed of rosy clouds, and sent a long, shining beam through the window of the pretty blue bedroom.

"Here, here," he called, "it's another day. Time to get up and take your place in the world."

"Nonsense, Mr. Sun," said Frances sleepily, and opening one eye, she looked at the bright sun for a second, before it dassled her so much she had to shut her eye in a hurry. "If I should stay here in bed all day, nobody would miss me for a minute."

"You are the one that is talking nonsense," retorted the sun. "Every-body has place in the world just like all the rest of us, didn't like all the rest of us, didn't

"You are the one that is talking nonsense," retorted the sun. "Everybody has a place in the world, you as well as the rest, so up with you, and be ready." And he climbed higher and higher in the bright blue sky.

"Frances," called her father a little later, from his room across the hall, "a button has come off of my coat, will you please sew it on for me?"

"Well good-night to you," said the sun. "My day is done. I'll see you in the morning," and he popped out of aight.

I Record only the Sunny Hours

The Guide

Fontainebleau, France HIS "Sunny Hour" was recorded in the stately halls of Fontainebleau last summer. An elderly little woman, lured by the majestic beauty of the Chateau, its tales of glory and chivalry, sat in the entry with a throng of expectant tourists waiting for the guide to escort them Tesdorpfavej 58, Copenhagen, Denmark through the palace. She was all eagerness. It had been one of her dearest dreams, to see the dwelling place of French kings and queens, the precious Gobelins, the gleaming mirrors, the portraits

HOLLYWCOD, CALIF. — Palacio Apts. — just opened and true to name: pleasing homestate armosphere: 1 to 4 rooms: radio; electric refrigeration: A1 maid and telephone service; ideal living and shopping location; use of the portraits are refrigeration. The property of the property o of court beauties, the lances of dauntless knights-but she had not reckoned on the long walk before her!
After following the guide for about half an hour through the vast chambers, it seemed as though she could not walk another step, and instead of taking her place in the front of the group, as she had at the beginning of the tour, she began to lag behind. As she passed a low stool covered in old gold brocade, the guide saw her look at it with an interest more utilitarian than sentimental—but guests were forbidden to touch the burnty and the same than the sentimental of the furniture! Without saying a word, the guide

Without saying a word, the guide left the group and disappeared down a passage, returning shortly with a chair, not an antique. He dusted it off carefully with his handkerchief, and with a smile of understanding gallantly offered it to the little lady, who accepted with alacrity, her eyes bright with gratitude.

When it was time to move on, the guide, with apologies for disturbing her, picked up the chair and all moved to the next room, where the little chair occupied a point of vantage. Thus, with the utmost patience and kindliness this guide carried the chair through the entire round of the Chateau, making it possible for one long-cherished dream to come

IN YESTERDAY'S MONITOR What They Say

DR. WILLIAM P. MERRILL:
"The way to peace is largely through changing bulwarks into boulevards, making high walls into highways, doing away with things that divide, and encouraging things that unite."

SIR HALL CAINE: "History shows that on the battle field itself moral strength compared to physical force has always been as four to one.' FRANK G. TYRRELL: "The nineteenth century made the world a neighborhood; it is the task of the twentieth to make it a brotherhood."

SIR ARTHUR CURRIE: The

genius of creative talent relies on its brother geniuses of hard work and self-control and self-determination." WILLIAM T. OLIVER: "War settles nothing—not even its own bills."

The Problem of German Debts

THE first public speech of the German Ambassador to Washington, Dr. von Prittwitz, made in New York Wednesday, presented gratifying information as to the financial and industrial progress of his Nation, but at the same time sounded a warning which may well be heeded by the world of international trade.

Since 1926, the Ambassador said, German economic conditions have shown a distinctly favorable trend. It is due partly to the operation of the Dawes plan, and partly to loans granted by the United States, which, including the Dawes loan, amounted in 1926 to about $595,000,000. These figures are quoted by the Ambassador. They may properly be supplemented by the statement in the New York World Almanac that "in 1927 Germany, despite its tight restrictions on foreign borrowings in the early part of the year, got $307,255,000 from America. . . Germany, since the flotation of the Dawes loan in 1924, has taken more than $1,000,000,000 from investors in the United States."

The fact is interesting as indicative of the nomic conditions have shown a distinctly favora-

The fact is interesting as indicative of the rapidity of Germany's economic rehabilitation—for only industrial and commercial activity could have required such great sums. It is gratifying, furthermore, as showing that war-time osities have, to a great extent, disappeared, or, at any rate, have not been permitted to influence unfavorably the response of American capital to Germany's appeal.

Having set forth the financial relationship now existing between his own country and the one to which he is accredited, the Ambassador went on to sound a note of warning. It is not a very vigorous one-no bugle blast to arouse terror, but at least a signal to awaken attention. He points out that to maintain her population and her industry Germany has to import foodstuffs and raw materials. In order to pay for these, the Nation must export manufactured goods, and in order to pay in addition the interest on its foreign debt there must be a material excess of exports over imports. At the present time this excess does not exist, and, as the Ambassador points out, "the import surplus as well as the cash transfers made by the Agent-General for Reparations must have been paid out of the proceeds of foreign credits."

In other words, Germany is paying her interest on existing debts by incurring new ones—a process which of course cannot be indefinitely continued.

It is worth noting that in the main the debts involved are not—as in the case of the war loans to the Allies—due to the United States Government, but to private investors. Only the payments under the Dawes plan are made to gov-ments under the Dawes plan are made to governmental creditors.

What is the solution of the problem in which Germany—not alone among the debtor nations—finds herself? In a world given over more than ever before in history to the raising of tariff walls against international trade, how is this debtor to secure that excess of exports by which alone solvency can be regained? The Ambasador was addressing the Board of Trade for German-American Commerce. His auditors must have known that, ready as the United must have known that, ready as the United States is to lend money to Germany, there is no indication of willingness to throw open its markets to her products in order that her debts may be the more speedily paid. What is the answer to the problem?

It is a question which will not down. In the case of those nations which were the associates of the United States in the war and which are now heavily its debtors the situation does not materially differ from that of Germany. Whether the creditor be the United States Government or the United States investor, the problem of how to pay remains the same, and the need for a market in the creditor's territory is identical. Some have thought that the Government should forgive its debts, but nobody suggests the application of this drastic remedy to the private claims, which are rapidly equaling in amount the public ones.

Is it possible that out of this situation may grow a controversy between the industrial powers that profit by the tariff and the financial forces that seem likely to suffer from it? Probably, as the same financial forces largely control the industrial interests, there will yet be found some way of reconciling these seemingly antagonistic forces.

Politics and Commerce Commission

F POLITICAL questions are involved in the deliberations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is through no desire on the part of that body that such matters have been injected into its consideration of economic questions. The recent agitation over the so-called lake cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the commercial that the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo cargo coal rate case is one which has developed the cargo lake cargo coal rate case is one which has developed in the Senate because of the partisan view of various senators. These seek preferment for their sections and would penalize members of the commission by falling to vote for confirmation of their appointments because the commissioners, individually, either have or have not based their decisions in accord with the views taken by the several interested senators. The very purpose for which the commerce commission was established is tending to break down under such political pressure. Members of the commission, whose reappointments— often their only means of support—are at stake can hardly be expected to render decisions based solely upon the facts of the case, as they see them, when their vote may mean their rejection by the Senate for reappointment to the com-

This is the issue recently raised in the Senate. In the lake cargo coal rate case a decision two years ago gave the advantage to the Kentucky-West Virginia fields by reason of favorable differential rates on coal moving northward to the Great Lakes ports. In a rehearing the commission reversed itself and increased the differential are investigated and save alleged. tials against the southern fields and gave alleged preferment to the Pennsylvania-Ohio soft coal fields. Union labor is interested because of the assertions that organized labor would be injured in Pennsylvania should the southern fields again receive the advantage in rates which they enjoyed prior to the reversal of the commission's

One commissioner who, in the first decision, had voted against giving preferment to the Pennsylvania operators, was not nominated for reappointment by the President. In his place a Pennsylvanian whose interests were those of the coal and railroad groups of that State was nominated, but the Senate refused to confirm the appointment. Another commissioner-one of the outstanding members of the commission by reason of his long and valued experience in transportation problems-then came up for reappointment, but his nomination by the President is the subject of debate in the Senate because he changed his position in the lake cargo coal rate case for reasons which, according to his statement, had brought new elements

How far the Senate can properly go in approving or rejecting the confirmation of a commerce commission appointee because of his attitude in important decisions is a question of prime importance. If members of the commission are to be intimidated, or, in effect, coerced, in their votes, the value of this organization as a rate-making body is lost. Thus far, its integrity and that of its members has never been questioned. If the solution is to be appointments for life, subject to impeachment for cause, with larger salaries, then the commerce commission's standing may remain unimpaired and its value to the railroads and to the ship-pers may continue to increase. But if the mem-bers are to receive notice, indirectly, that to vote contrary to the known views of the Senate majority will mean failure of reappointment to the commission, its decisions will inevitably become political rather than judicial in tone.

The Drink Evil in Russia

THE information recently published, that when the legalized sale of vodka was restored in Russia it was contended that the taking of this step would tend to stop the samogon (home brew) habit, thereby bringing the popular consumption of liquor under more effective governmental control, sounds like some of the arguments that have been forthcoming of late from the wet forces in the United States. The further information, therefore, is particularly illuminating that experience has established the fallacy of this line of reasoning, as the peasants continue to drink their samogon.

Worthy indeed of consideration by all those who are sincerely desirous of reaching accurate conclusions regarding liquor conditions in the United States is the news that the drink evil in with evident bad results both for public order and for the economic welfare of the country. One learns, further, that hooliganism has in-creased manyfold of late and that the Soviet Government has decided that the manufacture of this home-brewed liquor, whether for sale or personal use, is in and of itself a criminal act. In thus determining to take definite action against one phase of the liquor evil in its midst, the Soviet authorities are doing something which, so far as it goes, is likely to produce a certain modicum of results. The real lesson from this situation, however, is of course that the liquor menace must be wrestled with as a whole. It is of little value to attempt to play off one phase of it against another. Those opposed to prohibition in the United States claim that the restoration of some alcoholic drinks would offset the bootleg evil. Russia's experience does not uphold this view. The sobriety that existed during the short period of prohibition in that country has never been equaled. Abuses, it is true, crop up under drastic systems of liquor control. Despite all that is said to the contrary, however, the more liquor that is available, the more is drunk, and the more that is drunk the more evils are found attendant upon that drinking. Camouflaging an issue does not solve the prob-lems associated with it. The way to do away with the evils that result from liquor drinking is to put a stop to the legal distribution of that liquor in any form.

How to Extend Prosperity

THE interest manifested, the views expressed and the general accord voiced on many major points by representative leaders in the field of business, labor and economics, who discussed the question, "How can prosperity be retained and expanded?" in the symposium printed in The Christian Science Monitor, give assurance that this question is receiving atten-tion and carry promise of a solution leading to even wider prosperity.

Millions of individuals with millions of different ideas have built business to monumental proportions. Some of the ideas have withstood the fire of the economic melting pot. Today, however, the complexity and extent of business, with its responsibility to the general welfare of society, demand further changes, new ideas, new standards and practices. One of the problems is wages. Because money is the acproblems is wages. Because money is the accepted medium of exchange and a measure and means of prosperity, the effects of this commodity were discussed in the symposium from many points of view by various contributors on the ground of its being a factor about which more should be known. In some quarters there are differences of opinion as to the long-range value of high or low wages. But in this instance practically all of those quoted agree that the highest possible

of those quoted agree that the highest possible wage means the greatest possible markets, and they further see this combination as essential to wider prosperity.

From this point the question of employment logically develops, for markets depend upon wages and wages depend upon employment. This problem has been aggravated by the increase in mass-production machinery that has freed many men for other tasks. All agree that intensive study must be made to devise ways intensive study must be made to devise ways and means to develop new industries and more employment. As Professor Carver of Harvard said, "We must intensify prospecting." Many plans are proposed and considered to retain and increase prosperity. Some may work and others may not. One way to take up the slack of unemployment is to have the Government establish a reserve fund, to be used to carry on public improvements when conditions warrant. While the plan is old and still a subject of debate, its application to the present situation seems worthy of renewed consideration.

Of course, there is a safe anchor to the windward in the policies of those who consistently advocate more careful and intensive prosecution of the so-called orthodox methods of developing and expanding business and industry.

While individual efforts are not to be discouraged or discounted, there are some problems that demand collective study and collective action if the greatest benefit to the largest number is to be realized. One encouraging example of what may be accomplished is the federal reserve bank system, which has served so well and proved to be such a bulwark of strength. As a result of the study that has been undertaken, it is not unreasonable to expect that another piece of economic machinery may be evolved that will contribute further to the welfare, protection and progress of all the people of the United States.

To be sure, prosperity is not a thing that can be legislated or enforced. But the fact-finding committee now at work under the Government's direction undoubtedly will be able to place be-fore business men much important information. Business men have grown to be more generous in sharing and adopting practices of general worth, if for no other reason than their appreciation of the fact that what benefits all usually, perforce, benefits one.

Advancing the Cause of Art

DMISSION has been made by authority the highest that music, after all, is an essential matter in American education; not a necessity, perhaps, to every citizen, as a private accomplishment, but an indispensable factor in the whole national scheme of civilization, nevertheless. The acknowledgment is plain; and more than that, official; the head of a university having expressed the hope in a public statement that ways and means may be found for his institution and a music school lately established to work together to advance the cause of art in the United States. This declaration of seal for music is, in all clearness, an outcome of the labors of the men who carry on the Juilliard Musical Foundation; particularly, of the efforts of Eugene A. Noble, the secretary. For a first step, the Juilliard trustees purchased a building in New York, where Mr. Noble set up music classes, giving advanced pupils opportunity to study with distinguished teachers. For a second, they merged this incipient conservatory with the Institute of Musical providing an administrative committee, ionn Brekine, a Columbia University chairman, to look after both, under the name of the Juilliard School of Music. Lastly, they have raised the Juilliard School of Music to regular academic dignity and have elected Mr. Erskine president. It is on the occasion of Mr. Erskine's election that Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler issues an announcement, indicating that co-operation between the work of Columbia University and that of the Juilliard Musical Foundation is presently to come about.

For a long time American universities have experimented hesitantly with music education. They have offered conventional courses in the technique of composition, they have provided lectures on musical appreciation; and they have done a little something toward the encouragement of concerts. They find, however, that the country forges ahead at a comparatively slow pace under such a dispensation. The college course in counterpoint has led to no remarkable initiative in symphony writing, the talk on Wagner's thematic devices has caused no very lively movement in the building of opera houses, and the support of the glee club has hardly started America singing from coast to coast.

Now, for a change, it looks as though the universities were to treat music as something else than a little line of business in which they must stock up in order to hold a few special customers, and as something else than a calling for peculiarly gifted persons more or less like jugglers. Columbia, at any rate, joining forces with Juilliard, is evidently considering it a public problem of the first class.

A Happy Family

SHELTERED under the shoulder of a great green cliff, the little seaside village lay. It would be different to find it on the map. Too tiny is it to figure even in the Normandy guidebooks. Although it is on the coast, it has no beach—the tide comes up to the dunes on which the tethered sheep crop the rank herbage: while the high rock, which protects it from the winds, is cut sheer to a higgledy-piggledy confusion of black bowlders inclosing deep pools. Therefore, since holiday makers demand bathing above all, the village is unfrequented, and almost unknown. almost unknown.

Yet the surrounding country is as luscious as any in Normandy, and amid the apple orchards and the wheat fields are churches and chateaus whose stones are 800 years old. Here are the beauties of nature and the remains of the monuments of men. In the pleasant activities of today, we are vividly reminded of the vicissitudes of

Moreover, if one climbs the cliffs and gazes from the heights between the trees, one sees across the bay, standing as it has stood for many centuries, the most wonderful construction in western Europe—the famous Mont-Saint-Michel, the eighth wonder of the world, as Madame de Sévigné called it, an inaccessible granite island with thick fortified walls tapering to a spire.

The tiny place, with its handful of houses in which a few hundred people live, is therefore, despite the map makers, well worth visiting. In this respect it is similar to many other places in fertile and historic Normandy. But at least, thought the town dweller in search of repose, there would be found in this placid forgotten village a harbor of refuge for the cosmopolitanism that is a conspicuous feature of the usual French resorts.

Along the Riviera there are more foreigners than French. Deauville and Trouville and the rest of the Atlantic coastal towns are invaded by men and women of all nationalities. In Paris itself it is more than probable that one's taxi driver, one's waiter in the restaurant, one's fellow guest in the hotel, are not French; while on the boulevards, in the Latin quarter, at Montmartre, and at Montparnasse, those whom one jostles have come from he ends of the earth.

But "here, where the world is quiet"—as Swinburne sang—it would surely be possible to escape from the international throngs. How should the international throngs have ever heard of it? The French themselves have scarcely heard of it. So we believed when we cast our tent forces here some themselves and the statement of the second of the for a short sojourn under the sheltering shoulder.

That tent is merely figurative: in reality we entered a charming rustic hotel, with spacious gardens, and behind it a meadow with cattle grazing, and a terrace with fowls and rabbits, and beyond an arbor beneath the trees, from which one looked out on a panorama of hills and valleys and streams; and, in the distance, the sea and the solitary

We were sadly mistaken, however. In the gardens, as we walked, voices came to us too guttural to be French. They were the voices of two athletic young wanderers from Holland. We exchanged greetings and continued our promenade. Sitting under a striped umbrella that looked like a gigantic mushroom was a party of Russians. This was a surprising beginning. But when we sat down to dinner, entering into conversation with the couple at coast in 1927.

"How did you find your way here?" we asked the Dutch boys.

They told us that they were students who belonged to a traveling club, and every year they "discovered" some unknown part of France. They were not content to follow the beaten track. They tried to shun the cosmopolitan

"You are not altogether successful this year," we

"That is true," they answered, "but, at any rate, there is no multitude. We take long excursions on foot every day, and we see the real French countryside. It is so delightful and so different. More and more our comrades are coming to France."

The Russian general and his wife were cheerful companions. They had found their way to France, after the revolution, via Constantinople and Berlin. In the evenings the general was the liveliest member of the company. He joked unceasingly—except when he asked permission to bring down from his room the records of Chaliapin, which he placed upon the gramophone and listened to in solemn silence.

One day he told us his story: he had been especially attached to the household of the Tsar, had been imprisoned by the Bolsheviki, had escaped, had swept the streets at Saint-Cloud, and had now opened a shop in Paris. Certainly one would never have suspected that this happy man had undergone hardships. Why had he come to this little village? That he scarcely knew—it was just a fortuitous occurrence.

As for the Italian pair, the husband was an authentic Count who, having become involved in political troubles. was an exile.

The elderly Englishman, a retired lawyer, had boyhood associations with France, and was now building a country cottage in these parts. He had scoured the coast before he had found the place of his dreams. With the Germans, who were quiet, attentive, and exceedingly polite, he had long political discussions. They had the friendliest feelings for France.

The Americans, man and wife, had, we found, been everywhere in France: they had motored from town to town, and their only complaint was that France seemed no longer to be French.

"France is as French as ever it was," we replied, "and it is not this collection of different nationalities in the little hotel of a little French village which will make it less French. It is we who are more French."

We were sitting after dinner, Dutch and Germans and

SENSATIONAL doings in the air haven't dispensed with the need for well-built highways on terra firms. How the need for well-built highways on terra firms. How we have advanced in the last few years in the speed at which these highways can be built is shown by the statement that in 1910 an entire month was frequently required for building a single mile of concrete highway, while today the trained builder, armed with mammoth paving mixers that turn out a cubic yard of fresh concrete every minute or so, can lay a concrete ribbon 1500 feet long in eight or ten hours. In less than four days, that is, he can accomplish what a few years ago it took a month to achieve. ### The Paradox of Modern Travel

IN OLD days the traveler had to spend weeks or months in the country which he visited; and of necessity he learned the peculiarities of its people. THE food we eat passes into our system, and builds up the body without our being conscious of it; so is it with the mental and moral diet furnished by books. It becomes a part of ourselves. THERE is another lesson which we can learn from the Greeks, and that is the right use of leisure, which, by the way, the Greeks called schole, from which we derive our own word "school." Aristotle distinguished between work, amusement (or recreation), and leisure.

Work was an activity designed to produce an external result; amusement was recreation after work, which made fresh work possible; but leisure was the first use of the mind in activities which were ends in themselves—the hearing of noble music, intercourse with friends chosen for their worth, and, above all, the exercise of the speculative faculty.

We know today what work is; we know, well enough, the meaning of recreation; but do we know the nature of leisure? And has our State recognized the duty of providing the means for the enjoyment of leisure? The Athenian democracy of the Age of Pericles provided noble music and a noble drama. When will our State learn to give its citizens a national theater and opera?—

"'Aren't I?' Oh, No!"

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR !

To The Christian Science Monitos:

Having followed for years the apparently never-to-beended discussion of the legitimacy of the word "ain't," and its variations, I cannot resist adding (if it has not already been added by someone else) another angle of approach in the hope of a final solution,

"Ain't" is defined in no other than the excellent Webster's New International as being a contraction for
"are not" and "am not." Also used for "is not."
Colloquial or illiterate,

But certainly "ain't" can by no stretch of imagination be called a contraction of those two only; for a contraction, by definition in the same authority, is "the shortening of a word or of two connected words by the emission of a letter or letters." And no definition of contraction that I can find makes any provision for the addition of a letter which is foreign to the shortened words. Not even for the sake of euphony. And "ain't" contains such a foreign letter, "i," to be found in neither "are not" nor "am not."

It would therefore seem that this letter "ii" must be It would therefore seem that this letter. "i." must be either what is left of "is not" contracted or the first personal pronoun, I. To consider it as the former, gives us "a'i'n't" as a compound contraction of "are not" or "am not" and "is not"; the first apostrophe to stand for the "m" of "am" or the "re" of "are", the second for the "s" of "is" and the last as usual for the "o" of "not." For as in all contractions the places where the contractions occur must be explained by apostrophes.

However, all of us will agree that this renders the miserable word no better in grammar than it has ever been; and, though better in spelling, far worse in writing. Furthermore, there is no precedent in all the English language for such a compounded, "either-or" But as "are not" and "is not" each has a legitimate and easily spoken contraction, it seems logical that "ain't" must have had its origin in the effort to contract "am not," and that the "i" may easily have been derived from the pronoun which is inevitably associated with "am." I.

Why not, then, go back to that, if, as it seems, we must

why not, then, go back to that, if, as it seems, we must bear with the word at all; and by placing but one additional apostrophe where it will unmistakably explain the missing "m," render the contraction, "a'in't," forever correct English for "am I not"?

The only exception left for the purists to take in that event is the reduction of the big "I" to a little one (which might be a good thing). The word would at once be limited sufficiently to permit precise folks to use it nicely. And there would be added to the English language a delightfully quaint interrogative sentence in a single word.

On the right track "a'in't"? New Britain, Conn.

"Who Was 'Mr. W. H.'?"

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

To The Christian Science Monitor:

In a recent article in the Monitor on the question "Who Was 'Mr. W. H.'?" to whom Shakespeare dedicated his sonnets--mention is made of William Herbert Earl of Southampton. "Mr. W. H." is supposed to be William Herbert Earl of Pembroke, not Earl of Southampton.

Both the Earl of Pembroke and the Earl of Southampton have claims by the scholars as being the "W. H."

The Earl of Southampton was the patron to whom the poet dedicated his "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece," and was the friend of Mr. W. H. of the sonnets. His name, however, was not William, but Henry. Some critics say that W H. has been purposely changed for the sake of disguise and that W. H. really represents Henry Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton, but chronological results reject this suggestion.

If the "Commonplace Book" made by William Holgate recently acquired by J. Pierpont Morgan proves who W. H. was, it will indeed settle a question which Shakespeare scholars have striven to answer for three centuries.
